

Q: I see that former NBC anchor Alexis Glick is on the new Fox Business Network. How did she end up with that job?

MAX ROBINSON, Hayward, Calif.

Glick was ready for a challenge when Fox boss Roger Ailes invited her to talk. She told him she missed running a business; she had more than eight years of experience on Wall Street. Now she is VP of Fox Business News, plus she is the co-anchor of its morning show. "I get in at the crack of dawn. The first part of the day will be about the show. ... The second part of the day, I can focus on the channel." Glick, 35, a married mom of three boys (5, 3, and 10 months), is a "sportsaholic." She jokes that she told Ailes, "The truth is, I want to do the NFL pre-game show."

Glick wears two hats at the new Fox channel.
