

PROTOTYPE ISSUE
JAN '06

breaking the glass ceiling

shattered

Going Public:
ALEXIS
GLICK

On why she traded the Stock Exchange for TV

TRAVEL:
India on the Menu:
culinary holidays

12-HOUR FLIGHT, 4 HOURS TIL YOUR NEXT MEETING:
How to make the most of Singapore

COMPETITION:
Portfolio Picks:
12 women, 12 months...

Protecting Your Intellectual Property Rights in China:

A practical guide for companies

Shattering glass ceilings is somewhat of a pass-time for Alexis Glick. Early in her career, she became the first woman to manage a Floor Operation for a bulge bracket firm, then working for Morgan Stanley, where she served as Head of the New York Stock Exchange Floor Operations. She was also one of the youngest women to ever achieve the rank of Executive Director at Morgan Stanley. She has since made a successful career switch and is now fronting the third hour of NBC's Today Show. Was the switch as easy as it looks, or is something else happening behind the scenes?

Not actual story - Text for illustrative purposes only

Alexis Glick came to CNBC from Morgan Stanley, where she was head of floor operations at the New York Stock Exchange. She was the first women to manage a floor operation for a bulge bracket firm. Glick was one of the youngest women to achieve the rank of executive director at Morgan Stanley. She became a member of the New York Stock Exchange in September 2002. Glick traded consumer and entertainment stocks, utility and real estate investment trusts and, most notably, the financials, including banks, credit card stocks, insurance stocks and government agencies. She was also one of the top producers on Morgan Stanley's listed equity trading desk from 1998 through 2001.

She began her career as an analyst at Goldman Sachs in its equities division.

Glick earned a bachelor's degree in political science from Columbia University.

Alexis Glick born 1973 is a contributor on the 3rd hour of NBC's Today Show. Glick was also a substitute anchor on Early Today in February 2005 and currently acts as an occasional anchor on MSNBC Live. Previously, Glick was a senior business correspondent for CNBC.

Prior to joining CNBC, Glick worked for Morgan Stanley, where she served as Head of the New York Stock Exchange Floor Operations and became the first women to manage a Floor Operation for a bulge bracket firm. A member of the New York Stock Exchange since September of 2002, she was also one of the youngest women to ever achieve the rank of Executive Director at Morgan Stanley.

Glick traded Consumer and Entertainment stocks, Utility and Real Estate Investment Trusts and most notably, the Financials including Banks,

Going public:

ALEXIS GLICK

On why she traded the Stock Exchange for TV

Cover Feature

Credit Card stocks, Government Agencies and Insurance stocks at Morgan Stanley. She was also one of the top producers on the companies Listed Equity Trading Desk from 1998 through 2001.

Glick began her career as an analyst at Goldman Sachs in the Equities Division. Glick earned a bachelor's degree in political science from Columbia University.